Sincerity in Language.

To teach the meaning of a word thoroughly is to teach the nature of the spirit that coined it; the ~~secret~~ secret of language is the secret of sympathy, and its full charm is possible only to the gentle. And true beautiful speach is always the outcome of sincere and kindly speech. False speech apparently beautiful, may be constructed on principles imitated from those out of which sincere and truly beautiful speech has arisen; but all such utterance, whether in oration or poetry, is not only without permanent power, but it is distructive of the principles of sincerity it has usurped. So long as no words are uttered but in faithfulness, so long the artful language goes on exalting itself; but the moment it is shaped on external principles, it falls into frivolity and perishes.

And this truth would have been long ago manifest, had it not been that at certain periods there is always a tendency to deny the sincerity of the first masters of language. Once learn to write gracefully in the manner of an ancient author, and we are apt to think that he also wrote in the manner of some one else. But no noble nor right style was ever yet founded but out of a sincere heart.
